A most remarkable trial has just come to an end at Kinston, N. C. It resulted in the conviction of Alex. She was tried before Judge Armfield, convicted of murder, and sentenced to be hanged. She was ably defended by the whole bar of Kinston, appealed to the Supreme Court, and was given a new trial. The principal witness against her was Giles Parker, a white man whe had heretofore borne a good reputation among his neighbors. He was the lover of both women. The accused became jealous of her white rivat, and warned Parker, by a letter dropped in the Kinston postoffice, that if he did not cease his visits and attentions to the white woman, that she would "remove her." On August 12, just after dark, she went to the house of Julia, and found Parker standing near her. A gun was discharged, and Julia fell dead. Parker positively identified Alex. Morton as the murderer, though she stoutly denied the killing. Her employer's family believe she is innocent, and fought the case with the best array of legal talent.
